So surely you won't mind giving up your chauffeurs and cars for one day, and the City Club men can go without luncheon for once.

The City Club men grumbled some, but they didn't grumble next day, when they found that under Miss Hill's able guidance the tourists had paid so well for their luncheons that the club cleared $500. Miss Elinor Byrns, of the National Woman Suffrage Association's publication department, was one of the tourists on the Victoria Luise. Miss Byrns didn't ride around the island in a commandeered motor car. She went to visit some friends who lived near San Juan. The man of the family was a member of the City Club, and always lunched there, and great was the surprise when his family received a dismal message from him about the middle of the afternoon to the effect that he was starving and might be home for luncheon. When he got there he told Miss Byrns and the family how he had been turned out of his club to make room for "a lot of rubber necked tourists," and that was how Miss Byrns came to know Miss Hill and the way she advertised
